Hugh Miller is the author of three critically acclaimed and bestselling books - After Darwin, Body Sense and The Language of Biology - and an award-winning filmmaker. He has received a number of honours including the Churchill Medal for Public Service, and he lives in Oxford, England with his wife, Vrinda. Vrinda is the author of Cease Fire, which received the Booksellers' Choice Book of the Year. Vrinda is passionate about the ancient teachings of the Tibetan and Sanskrit traditions. These ancient teachings are fascinating in their empirical-spiritual nature, and in this groundbreaking interview she sheds light on the scientific foundations of the ancient wisdom, and its relation to modern science. In this powerful interview we discuss the role of science and the humanities in the 21st century, the connection between science and the sacred, and the meaning of our natural world. Hugh and Vrinda's answers to questions include: What is the role of technology in the 21st century? How do we as individuals connect with the natural world? What are the three most important qualities that constitute human character? How is teaching in the sciences relevant to the humanities? How does the natural world teach us the spiritual? How do we see, and what is the difference between seeing and knowing? How can the conjunction of science and the sacred lead to the discovery of new realities? Listen to the interview Vrinda writes: First, Hugh and I thank you for inviting us to share our journey through this recording studio, right up to the sofa, the kitchen, the dining room, and into the living room. We are grateful to you for being our host. Secondly, thanks to the producers at the Center for Inquiry. Thanks to Paul Kurtz for his help and the Creative Commons license. Thanks to Peggy and Lowell for introducing us to the notion of a podcast, and to Will Deacon for all his support. Thanks to my best friend and my husband for serving as first listeners, and to our guests for joining us to complete our circle of friends. We are grateful for all of your help, and we are honored that you believed that we could contribute something to your tradition. Hugh adds: Thank you, Vrinda. For me this is all about Vrinda, and the philosophical roots of her work. I'm so proud of her. I'm proud of our work together. Thank you

[Nonspecific, atypical, peripheral, symmetrical polyneuropathy: a clinical-pathological study of 35 cases]. The clinical and pathological features of a series of 35 cases of nonspecific atypical peripheral polyneuropathy are described. Clinical onset was usual, with slight to moderate motor and sensory impairment symmetrical in the lower limbs, starting distally and involving usually the longest segments and most abundant sensorial organs. The diagnosis of nonspecific atypical polyneuropathy was based on clinical and histologic criteria, neurophysiologic evidence and evolution during follow-up. Electrophysiologic studies were performed in 27 patients. All had either a slowing of conduction velocities or the presence of conduction block or depression. Small nerve fibres were most frequently involved, but large fibre involvement was also seen. The atypical form of polyneuropathy was characterized by a constant evolution of clinical and neurophysiologic features, contrasting with those of either symmetrical or asymmetrical peripheral neuropathy. There was, however, a trend towards a more benign evolution of the disease with delayed onset and, often, stabilization, with a favorable response to treatment. The best-selling book by the American astronaut Scott Kelly is set for a UK edition early next year. On March 19, the American astronaut Scott Kelly is scheduled to reach his one-year anniversary on the International Space Station. He will be joined on the ISS by Japanese astronaut Takuya Onishi. The German-Russian cosmonaut Oleg Novitsky is due to return to Earth before the end of March. During his year in space, Scott Kelly wrote a book called Year In Space that describes his views on life in space. The book, due for release in the UK in early 2020, will be published by Penguin Random House. The publishers revealed at a media event on Monday that the book will be available in the UK in about two months after it is released in the US. In the book, Kelly describes how the space environment changed his mind about the Earth. "The greatest surprise for me was the awareness of just how small the world is and how tiny the people are,” Kelly said at the media event, according to news reports. “It’s hard to put into words and it didn’t take long to see just how deep the loneliness goes. The beauty is still there. But it
